5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Maybe Rob Gronkowski takes out Bill Belichick's knees before the season is done, and maybe Tom Brady drops an elbow on the ol' ball coach. We're not certain if all this Brady-Gronk-Belichick drama is over or not, but on Sunday against the Texans everything seemed to be back to normal. Gronk was great. Brady was great. And most importantly, Belichick was great. Belichick is now the unnamed defensive coordinator for this team, with Josh McDaniels handling the offense. Under Belichick's watch on Sunday, the defense looked as good as it has in years. For more on the Pats win, please see page 12 and visit metro.us.

1 HANCOCK ADAMS COMMON UNVEILED IN QUINCY

On Saturday, city officials and the public came together to celebrate the unveiling of the Hancock Adams Common in Quincy. Located in the heart of the city, the new common was built at the former location of a militia training field and the Old Town Hall. The $35 million project revamped the old building and its surrounding four acres of land into a commons dedicated to founding fathers John Hancock and John Adams. The new green space features monuments dedicated to Hancock and Adams, beautiful gardens, water fountains, benches, and walkways. "Made of clay, then cast in bronze and installed, I hope people will like them," sculptor Sergey Eylanbekov said of the monuments he created, dedicated in memory of both founding fathers. Gov. Charlie Baker, Quincy Mayor Thomas P. Koch, Congressman Stephen F. Lynch and Pulitzer Prize winner and historian David McCullough all took part in the official dedication ceremony. SARAH LUONA

2 TRUMP FACING A 'COUP,' ACCORDING TO BANNON

President Donald Trump is facing a "coup", former White House chief strategist Steve Bannon told Reuters, pointing to an anonymous column in the New York Times detailing resistance within the administration. "What you saw the other day was as serious as it can get. This is a direct attack on the institutions," Bannon said "This is a coup, okay." The column was published on Wednesday and was written by an unnamed senior administration official, the New York Times said. The writer slammed Trump's "amorality" and said: "Many of the senior officials in his own administration are working diligently from within to frustrate parts of his agenda and his worst inclinations." Bannon said the last time a president had been challenged in such a fashion was during the Civil War, when General George B. McClellan clashed with the then-president, Abraham Lincoln. "This is a crisis. The country has only ever had such a crisis in the summer of 1862 when General McClellan and the senior generals, all Democrats in the Union Army, deemed that Abraham Lincoln was not fit and not competent to be commander in chief," Bannon said.

3 CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATE PRESSLEY ATTENDS RALLY WITH SEN. WARREN

U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) (C) along with congressional Democratic candidate Ayanna Pressley (R) and Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jay Gonzalez (L) appear together at a Democratic Party Unity Rally on Sunday in Cambridge.

4 KAEP THANKS PLAYERS KNEELING DURING ANTHEM

Colin Kaepernick used social media to thank the first two players who knelt during the playing of the United States national anthem on the opening Sunday of the National Football League season. Miami Dolphins wide receivers Kenny Stills and Albert Wilson were the only players reported to kneel before the eight early games kicked off. "My Brothers @kstills and @ithinkisee12 continue to show their unwavering strength by fighting for the oppressed!," Kaepernick said in a Twitter post accompanied by a picture of the two players kneeling. "They have not backed down, even when attacked and intimidated. Their courage will move the world forward! "Love is at the root of our resistance!" Kaepernick is the most visible face among NFL players who have been using the anthem over the past two years to protest against social injustice and police brutality. The issue has remained in the spotlight, with President Donald Trump highly critical of the protesting players. The NFL owners in May approved a rule requiring players to either stand on the field for the anthem or remain in the locker room, but the policy is on hold.

5 FLORENCE STRENGTHENS, HEADS TOWARD EAST COAST

Florence intensified into a hurricane on Sunday and is expected to strengthen rapidly as it churns across the Atlantic Ocean toward the East Coast, where it could make landfall by the end of the week. With winds at 75 miles per hour, Florence became a Category 1 hurricane and was expected to develop within a day into a major storm, defined as Category 3 or higher, according to the National Hurricane Center (NHC) in Miami. "Make your plans now," South Carolina Gov. Henry McMaster urged residents during a Sunday afternoon news conference. "Presume that a major hurricane is going to hit right smack-dab in the middle of South Carolina." Forecasters were also tracking two more storms further out in the Atlantic, with Tropical Storm Isaac expected to become a hurricane later on Sunday as it barreled toward the Caribbean. U.S. residents from South Carolina to Virginia were warned that Florence posed an increasing risk of life-threatening coastal storm surge, as well as flooding from heavy rainfall inland. On its current trajectory, winds from the hurricane could reach the southeastern United States late on Wednesday or Thursday.

Dog DNA test kits can be used to identify your pet's breed and what diseases they may be prone to, but the science behind the latter may not be up to snuff. ISTOCK

Experts raise alarm about using dog DNA tests

You may think it's fun to figure out what's in your dog's DNA, but don't use these at-home kits to make life-or-death decisions about your pup's health, experts say.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

If you're wondering what kinds of dog breeds make up the lovable mutt you recently adopted, you might opt for an at-home dog DNA test. Yup, like the ones you can do on yourself to see where your ancestors are from.

But don't use that kit to make health decisions for your pup, experts warn.

In a recent opinion piece published in the journal Nature, three experts detail how these at-home kits shouldn't replace in-office veterinary services.

Though vets have had access to dog DNA tests for a while, there are still unknowns, especially with the at-home kits, about what the data means. There are crucial scientific questions to understand before you can use the results to make a medical decision for an animal.

"Like, if you are looking at a mutation you think is associated with neurological disease, how many dogs with the mutation actually end up getting sick?" said Dr. Lisa Moses, a veterinarian at the MSPCA Angell Animal Medical Center and a bioethicist research scholar with the Harvard Center for Bioethics. "We still don't know the answer."

Many individuals with a certain genetic mutation never get sick, she explained, and for any given genetic disease, there are a lot of other factors besides one gene mutation that determine whether or not someone, or some animal, will fall ill.

So until it's known just how many dogs of a certain breed are likely to get a disease if they have one genetic mutation, "it's really hard to know whether the [dog DNA test result] means anything or not."

In a statement sent to Metro, Ryan Boyko, CEO of Embark, a leading consumer dog DNA test company, said that Embark's test results are at least 99.99 percent accurate, but that dog owners should bring that information to their vet, not make medical decisions completely on their own.

"Genetic testing results can be very useful for veterinarians to help better assess symptoms in a dog or to guide clinical care in certain situations," he said. "Many of the mutations tested are highly predictive of certain health problems."

But making "inappropriate conclusions" from your dog DNA test results can be harmful, he added.

The problem, Dr. Moses said, is that the average vet may not even know what to do with the kit test results, or how to correctly interpret them, because they're not a genetics expert.

Vets also don't know exactly how these companies are doing their tests, because the companies don't have to disclose that information. Companies tend to be vague about what specific genetic variant they are even testing for, per the Nature piece.

"Genetic testing results can be very useful for veterinarians to help better assess symptoms in a dog."
Ryan Boyko, CEO of Embark

So, what if you already sent in your pup's cheek swab, or were planning to order a dog DNA test kit?

"What I would say is, if you want to do it for fun, do it for fun, but don't make medical decisions based on the results," Dr. Moses said. "Good old regular check-ups are a better way to take care of your dog at this point."

Boston Diner en Blanc held Sunday

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

For the past five years, sophisticated foodies have celebrated Boston Diner en Blanc with an elegant, flash-mob-style dinner party, and this year was no different.

On Sunday night, nearly 1,400 diners all dressed in white headed to the top-secret location, which ended up being Boston City Hall Plaza, to celebrate the five-year anniversary of Boston Diner en Blanc.

Le Diner en Blanc, which translates to White Dinner, has acquired a cult following in recent years, and is now held in over 80 cities worldwide. The first Diner en Blanc was held in 1988 in Paris' Parc de Bagatelle in the Bois de Boulogne.

As in recent years, attendees of the Boston Diner en Blanc were asked to wear all-white attire and bring their own white chairs, tables and dinnerware. They weren't told where the party would take place until shortly before the event. This year's guests enjoyed dinner, dancing, and entertainment by Boston-based DJ Ryan Brown, who also performed at last year's celebration on the Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway.

New York City is planning to hold its own Diner en Blanc on Sept. 17. Last year, over 5,000 guests attended that festive pop-up dinner.

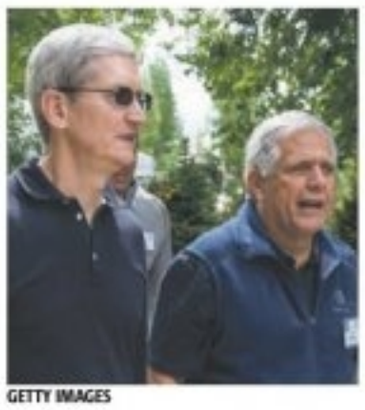
Moonves to resign, CBS settles lawsuit over company control: Sources

CBS Corp has reached deals to settle litigation over the future of the company with its controlling shareholder Shari Redstone and National Amusements Inc and an exit agreement with CEO Leslie Moonves, two sources familiar with the discussions said on Sunday.



GETTY IMAGES

The settlement and Moonves' resignation could be announced as early as before the markets open on Monday, according to these sources who asked not to be identified because the plans have not been made public. The timing of the announcements could still change as the settlements are reviewed.

The latest developments end years of uncertainty over the future of CBS, which was headed to court with National Amusements on Oct. 3.

CBS and National Amusements declined to comment.

As part of the settlement, CBS will donate a portion to an unnamed charity and reserved the right to claw back the rest of a severance package depending on the results of investigations into allegations of sexual assault and harassment, sources familiar with these discussions said. The value of the total package was estimated at $100 million, according to reports last week. Two outside law firms are conducting the investigation.

The settlement comes on the heels of a second report from the New Yorker published on Sunday in which six additional women have raised assault and harassment claims against Moonves. In a statement to the magazine, Moonves acknowledged three of the encounters, but said they were consensual.

But reports of Moonves' settlement last week drew fire from advocacy groups.

"These allegations speak to a culture of toxic complicity at CBS, where the safety of women was continuously ignored to protect the careers of powerful men and the corporation," said a representative of Time's Up, a campaign against workplace sexual misconduct, in a statement on Sunday following the New Yorker's second story on Moonves.

"CBS, as you sit in a room debating next steps to rectify the damage done, remember that the world is watching. We will accept nothing less than full transparency of the investigation's findings, a commitment to real change across all levels of CBS management and no reward for Les Moonves," Time's Up said. Tom Papa on getting 'Baked' in Boston and texting Matt Damon

The comic ships up to the Hub for the latest episode of his Food Network series.

MATT JUUL

Tom Papa has been to Boston plenty of times over the years for stand-up gigs, but thanks to his new Food Network series, he finally got a chance to fully experience the city's amazing culinary scene.

Fans will get to see Papa indulge on all sorts of tasty treats from local shops and restaurants when the Boston episode of "Baked" airs Monday night, which features stops at Pagu, Santarpio's Pizza, Flour Bakery + Cafe and Maria's Pastry Shop. Papa was particularly impressed by the North End bakery and its owner Maria Merola, even going so far as to say that "she makes the best lobster tails" he's ever had.

Ahead, the comedian turned Food Network host opens up about his new show, his trip to the Hub and if his pal Matt Damon gave him any foodie recommendations.

Tom Papa travels the country in search of tasty baked goods on his new Food Network series. FOOD NETWORK

Over the years, you've talked a lot about your love of baking, especially sourdough bread. Why take things to the next level and do a food show?

I wasn't really looking to do it. I was literally just making [bread] and getting better at it and sharing it with my friends and family. As a comedian, I would travel the country doing my shows and I would always stop in at bakeries and meet people and learn what they were doing and see if I could get better at what I was doing. And, of course, eat all the stuff that they were making. It kind of caught on social media and then Food Network caught wind of it.

How was your trip to Boston for a foodie adventure?

It was great. It really is one of my favorite cities. It always has been from a comedy standpoint. When you do tour and you're in these places, all you're doing is performing and eating. There's always this fantasy about going to museums and doing all that stuff, but it just comes down to making people laugh and finding something to eat. It was great. We had such a good time. It's so diverse. We did that Pagu place over in Cambridge, [Tracy Chang] is just super talented at making all of these fresh, new twists on things. She's super creative and super new. Then you go to a place like Santarpio's which, for 100 years, has been baking bread the exact same way, and it's just all these old Italian dudes making sausage in a coal-burning oven inside the place. There's no way that gets approved nowadays.

Did you ask your friend Matt Damon for any recommendations for your Boston episode?

No, I didn't ask him for tips because he was working on a movie while I was doing it. But I sent him a picture of me outside Fenway. If you want to get a response out of him, he's a very busy guy, all you have to do is put a picture of that up and he'll text you right back.

The Boston episode of "Baked" airs Monday, Sept. 10, at 10 p.m. on the Food Network.

Managing the stress of back to school

A study finds what stresses parents out the most this time of year.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

With Labor Day behind us, summer is unofficially over. That means parents are sending their children back to school or putting them on the school bus for the very first time. This can be a stressful time for children and parents. With the stress of daily life on top of the anxiety of a new experience for kids, how can you make sure you are taking care of yourself as well?

A study by Care.com of 1,000 parents found that the most stressful thing for parents at back to school time is simply getting their children out of bed in the morning.

Seventy-six percent of all mothers and 67% of all fathers said that this was the biggest anxiety, followed closely by stresses involved with after school activities which 60% of all parents say they have.

The study also found that parents who said that they were forced to leave work to pick up their children 6.3 times on average and attended school events another 9.1 times a year.

of all mothers say the most stressful thing is getting their children out of bed

Adding that all up equals over two weeks of interrupted work days each year. Considering many personal time off (PTO) policies at most offices, that could add up to a lot of time that parents could request for things like summer vacations or, in some cases, sick time away from work.

The study also found out that the average parent spends around $220 per child going into elementary school in the fall.

This could be tough for parents working hourly wages who might have to take time off from work to pick up their children from school or attend school functions.

In fact, managing the stresses around back to school time is something employers should take note of and understand.

Most parents must devote time at this time like they would to like part-time job.

"I try to talk to my children as much as possible so that I stay engaged," one 31-year-old mother of four told Care.com on how she prepares herself for this time of year.

"Also, I visit their school lunches to reduce their anxiety. Waking up early and preparing everything the night before helps with morning stress."

The truth is, the more you find time to prepare for the morning madness before sending your children off to school and heading to work, the better off you will be.

To be honest, it will never be easy juggling it all. Just take a deep breath and remember that you can get through this.

NEW YORK JETS AT DETROIT (-6.5)

LA RAMS (-4) AT OAKLAND

BET OF THE DAY

We saw one huge upset in the NFL on Sunday as the Buccaneers put up 48 points in New Orleans to take down the overrated Saints. What would be equally shocking is if Oakland were to beat the Rams late tonight. The line here started out as Rams -2.5 but has moved to Rams -4. The hype is real with LA, unlike New Orleans.

Pats look strong in opener

Three things we learned as the Patriots toppled the Texans.

MATT BURKE

The lasting image from the Patriots' Super Bowl loss to Philadelphia was Tom Brady being strip-sacked in the fourth quarter. The lasting theme from the Patriots' Super Bowl loss to Philadelphia was that their defense couldn't stop a nosebleed.

In the Pats' 2018 season opener Sunday at Gillette Stadium, we saw great signs that both the protection for Tom Brady and the overall play of the defense may be vastly improved this season as New England toppled the Texans, 27-20.

Here are three things we learned Sunday.

Ball hawks

The Patriots defense had a swagger about it on Sunday as they swarmed to the ball. Unlike last year, the Pats D had its way with Houston quarterback Deshaun Watson, holding him to just 176 yards passing on 17-of-34 passing. Watson did throw a TD pass but was also picked off by Stephon Gilmore and was sacked three times. The Texans' signal-caller finished the game with a paltry 62.9 passer rating thanks to a Pats defense that never allowed him to be comfortable.

Houston fumbled on its first play of the season as it was recovered by the returning Dont'a Hightower. The Pats D forced the Texans to a three and out on their first "real drive" of the game, and Trey Flowers and Deatrich Wise combined for a huge third down sack in the first quarter to hold Houston to a field goal. The Texans had prime position on that drive after Tyrann Mathieu picked off Tom Brady, but the fact that the Pats held them to just three points there was a signal that things might be different for this defense this season.

A mix of old and new

We spent six months worrying about Brady and Gronk as neither player seemed happy this past offseason. But on game day Sunday, all was again right in Foxboro.

Gronkowski finished with a game-high 123 yards receiving on seven catches, and had a TD grab to open the New England scoring.

Brady didn't just rely simply on Mr. Reliable, however, as he threw TD passes to Phillip Dorsett (seven catches, 66 yards) and James White (four catches, 38 yards) as well. Fullback James Develin and Cordarrelle Patterson also figured heavily into the Pats offense.

Limiting mistakes

Bill Belichick always preaches about mistake-free football, and while the Pats played mostly clean on Sunday, there were areas of concern.

Riley McCarron's muffed punt late in the game allowed the Texans to hang around on Sunday and was reminiscent of Chris Harper's fumble on a punt return in 2015 in a Patriots loss to the Broncos in Denver. Harper was cut by the Patriots the next day. Not sure if McCarron will suffer the same fate, but it wasn't a good look from the Pats practice squad regular.

McCarron's gaffe led to a Bruce Ellington TD grab and pulled the Texans within seven points of the Patriots with 2:08 left.

The Patriots couldn't get much of a drive going when they got the ball back, but if there is such a thing as a walk-off punt, Ryan Allen had one on Sunday. His 54-yard boot pinned the Texans on their own 1-yard line with 43 seconds left, and Houston never had a real shot at tying the game.

Cancer You can start projects that will encourage change at home and work. How you handle others will make a difference to the outcome. Encouragement will bring you closer to your goal.

Leo Accept the inevitable, but don't initiate change. Joint ventures aren't in your best interest, and making changes at home would be too expensive. Bide your time.

Virgo Make the choice to do all you can. Bringing about change is never easy, but the satisfaction you gain by doing something good will be yours to keep forever.

Libra Listen carefully and make amendments to whatever doesn't sit well with you. Honesty and openness will help you avoid stress caused by always trying to please everyone around you.

Scorpio Personal changes will energize you. Whether it's an alteration at home or to your appearance, the outcome will give you the boost you need to take on bigger pursuits. Romance is highlighted.

Sagittarius Keep an open mind, but don't let anyone railroad you into doing something you shouldn't. If you desire change, take a close look at yourself and strive for self-improvement.

Capricorn Go over important papers and make adjustments that will lead to new opportunities. Organization and preparation will be important.

Aquarius Patience, passion and hard work will pay off. Don't make minor setbacks a big deal, and say no to anyone trying to push you to overspend.

Pisces You'll have plenty of ideas, but what will truly make the difference will be the people you choose to work alongside. Collaborate with those who bring out the best in you. EUGENIA LAST
